

Counsel

Amy Valentine McClelland brings extensive experience in complex civil litigation, white-collar defense, and employment law to NFC. A skilled litigator and trusted advisor, she has represented businesses, municipalities, and elected officials in high-stakes matters, from litigation avoidance strategies to defending against claims under Title VII, CEPA, and vicarious liability. In addition to acting as in-house employment counsel for small businesses -- developing policies, ensuring compliance, and resolving workplace disputes -- Amy has handled sensitive internal investigations, federal and state inquiries, and appearances before legislative bodies.

With a strong background in commercial litigation, products liability, and tort matters, Amy is adept at guiding cases from inception through appeals, including before the Third Circuit and New Jersey Appellate Division. She also has notable experience in ERISA-related benefit disputes and federal investigations into union practices. A dedicated advocate both in and out of the courtroom, Amy has successfully represented clients in state and federal courts and has provided pro bono representation in asylum proceedings.

When Amy is not advocating for her clients, you can often find her playing pickleball or reading a good book. She has been an active volunteer in educational initiatives in her local community.
